CMS ARTICLE - Why are you looking for a job?

This is the first question that you MUST ask yourself before you start the search for a job. I'm looking for a job because.....

It can be any reason but it must be specific and crystal clear.

Why is this question important? Well, let me share based on my real life experience...

8 years ago, I was a fresh graduate with an engineering degree. Like most of the fresh graduates out there, I'm excited to venture into my first job. Did I ask myself why I'm looking for a job at that time?

For sure NO.... but the only thing that I knew of at that time was; a fresh graduate must find a job.

Well, at that time, I was too naïve to know that having a degree will not guarantee me a job. So the way I approached my job search is more or less by sending my resumes out to any engineering job vacancies available in the newspapers and hope to be called for an interview.

Fortunately, I did get several job interviews and finally after several rounds of interviews, I got a job offer and started my career as an "engineering" technical liaison or specifically my title is called "Program Engineer". For me, as long there is an engineer word in my title, I would consider myself an engineer ☺

BUT my job is more like a coordinator than an engineer. At first, I'm delighted to get a job but after 1 ½ years (even though I learnt a lot on leadership and building up my soft skills), I started to realize that this coordinator job is not the job I'm looking for. I just realized the reason why I'm looking for a job is to work as a practicing engineer. Luckily for me, it was not too late and I finally got my dream job as an engineer after leaving this first job.

What is the moral from my experience?

TIPS:

The first thing to do before looking for a job is to clearly understand why you are looking for a job.

From my experience, if I understand my objective earlier, I might have focused my job search on a true engineering work. But since I don't have a clear objective from the beginning, my job search became a general job search. That is why, I thought my first job is an engineering work but later found out it is more a coordinator job with an engineering title.
